

Fall Harvest Calendar

These dates are the last planting dates with a good chance of a successful fall harvest. This calendar is based on an average first frost date of October 30. There is a 50% chance of a frost by this date. There is no guarantee that an early frost or freeze won't kill plants before you get a chance to harvest. Check weather forecasts regularly to see if a frost is predicted. If a frost seems likely, cold-sensitive plants might be protected with a layer of paper or cloth (not plastic) draped lightly over the plants. Some plants are very cold tolerant and can take freezing temperatures without injury. If there is extreme cold or heavy snow predicted, it may be best to harvest what you can in advance of the cold.

The two charts have the same information, listed by date or alphabetical order.
